Do you have a heart for world missions, but have either a calling or a need to stay right where you are? The passion that God has placed in your heart is not just about serving Him in a new way in the distant future. You can make a genuine difference right now.

The Need

Wycliffe needs at least 3,000 more people to leave their current jobs and serve around the world, but we also need many times that number of people back home, supporting those who go.

Full time personnel who work with Wycliffe overseas (and in support roles here in Canada) rely on support from friends and churches. This can be more than financial and prayer support—there are many practical ways to help and encourage.

In addition to supporting existing people and projects, there is a huge need to make the ministry of Wycliffe more widely (and more deeply) known. Many Christians are not aware of the ongoing need for Bible translation, while others may think Wycliffe can only use people who are highly skilled in linguistics. If you are acquainted with our members, or have visited our Web site, you know differently.

What's Involved

Here in Canada, you can do all kinds of things to ensure the success of the Bible translation movement.

You can be a supporter and advocate of individual Wycliffe members, helping to ensure that the missionaries and their work are prominent in the thoughts and prayers of your congregation.

You can become an active member of a local team, serving for a few hours or a couple of days a week, to help promote the work and see that both new and existing members and projects are adequately supported.

You can also be active in maintaining and growing a healthy Church here in Canada, ensuring that the mission fields are not neglected. It's vital that those already in the Church are looking outwards as well as upwards, with a strong desire to reach those without Christ, both here and around the world.
